I saw in a paper that the thing mest lacking in the Klondike region is the true spirit of a home. It is reported to be only a place for making money. Is it not possible that there are many farms in the same category? I know of many farms where the only object is to make money, and as homes they amount to very little. Everything is sacrificed to getting dollars. Getting dollars is all right, for with out them there can be no home, with the dollar in making a happy home. The Homestead.
